A close-up photograph of a hand holding a small, bright yellow flower. The hand is positioned palm-up, with the flower resting in the center. The background is a soft, out-of-focus blur of warm colors, suggesting an indoor setting with natural light. The overall mood is gentle and contemplative.

“ People generally believe gratitude comes from receiving a gift. This may be the case. But the truth is that the feeling of gratitude – in all its depth and genuineness – is actually what generates giving.

01.Foreword

How can we promote the culture of giving in Brazil?

How do you engage new players and organize an ecosystem towards a collective effort for the cause?

These are the questions we have asked ourselves, as members of the Movement for a Culture of Giving (Movimento por uma Cultura de Doação) and which have inspired the launch of the Task Force that has prepared these Guidelines.

As the result of a carefully conducted listening and research process, this document provides indications on the pathways that seem to be key for everyone who wishes to foster a stronger and more qualified culture of giving in our country.

Hereafter you will find five main guidelines that will potentialize the culture of giving in Brazil. For each of them, there is a specific vision, summary, recommendations, key players and leading existing initiatives in the field.

The recommendations are presented according to their potential for impact on the field. At the end of this document you will find detailed information about the process behind it, the Task Force and the Culture of Giving Movement.

02.Statement

We dream about a society in which people give generously. Where causes and organizations get the resources necessary to fulfill their goals and compose an vibrant, strong, autonomous civil society. With it, our democracy becomes stronger.

Where each citizen is conscious of her social (or civic?) role and of the relevance of her donation to the improvement of the quality of life of people, of our community and of our country. Where giving became part of daily life.

United by this common dream and because we believe in giving as a central element for the formation of the country we want to live in, the Movement for a Culture of Giving is born.

For people who believe that a more just society is possible and is willing to work towards making it happen. A space to reflect, study, deepen our understanding and unite forces, minds and hearts to find the pathways to build and strengthen the culture of giving in Brazil, because we believe this is the best we can do for our country. Because we insist in believing it is possible.

Statement created by several minds, graciously knitted together by Tati Piva

03. Giving in Brazil: Overview

The Covid-19 pandemic has made it especially difficult to provide an overall picture on any matter, let alone when it comes to the culture of giving. Few aspects of society have been as affected by the outbreak as the culture of giving, though in this regard, quite positively.

Even if data is still scarce to allow for the better understanding of the recent mobilization, except for the numbers collected by the Donations Monitor, brilliant initiative organized by the Brazilian Association of Fund Raisers (ABCR) which, on July 29th 2020 totaled over BRL 6 billion given to efforts to fight Covid-19 and its effects. That being said, let us take a closer look on the data collected before the pandemic.

Main Obstacles to the Practice of Giving in Brazil

1. People do not understand what non-profit organizations (NPOs) do, and do not trust them

2. People do not have a clear understanding of what a cause is or of the change-making power of giving

3. People believe that those who make donations should not talk about it

04. How to promote the culture of giving in Brazil?

The intention of this guidelines document is to articulate and enhance a common agenda for players interested in stimulating the cause of giving in the country.

Based on the collective work by over 70 leaders¹ engaged in the promotion of the culture of giving in Brazil, it was possible to determine five guidelines that have the potential to further and strategically develop the field in the next years. The invitation laid here is that everyone interested in and moved by the cause strengthening giving be inspired by the guidelines, invest in connected initiatives and tweak their operating models according to the recommendations detailed under each guideline.

¹ The complete list of participants that have contributed to the assembling of this document can be found on pages 36 and 37

Guideline #1

Educate to Promote the Culture of Giving

Summary

Fostering civic and community spirit in Brazil is key, thereby promoting the role civil society organizations play in ensuring both fundamental rights and democracy. We must create environments that encourage people, families and businesses to give on a more conscious and recurring basis, especially with respect to the future generations and in terms of geographic diversity. The more people are able to openly speak about their giving, the more awareness will be raised towards building a stronger and diverse donation environment, as giving becomes part of every citizen's day-to-day life.

Key Players

- . Local/community associations
- . Trade associations in the financial and accounting industries
- . Accountants, Banks
- . Clubs and other associative organizations
- . Non-profit sector consultants
- . Companies
- . Schools
- . Family Offices
- . Philanthropists
- . Religious institutions
- . Influencers/trendsetters
- . Business and family foundations
- . Schools and universities
- . Private bankers

We need to promote giving-oriented education.

Guideline #1

We recommend to all of those interested in this guideline, that they contribute:

- . To develop education initiatives focused on future generations, across both public and private schools and universities.
- . To train media professionals to positively cover the work of civil society organizations and of the entire ecosystem brought forth by donations made in Brazil.
- . To promote the experience of giving.
- . To promote empathy, meaning and the experience of community belonging.

- . To train wealth management advisors to foster and facilitate donations made by their clients.
- . To promote discussion on the culture of giving in general family interaction, bringing friends and family closer to causes and organizations.
- . To train executives to make strategic philanthropic decisions and to promote the culture of giving within the corporate environment (with clients and employees).

- . To promote opportunities for social collective actions.
- . To raise awareness among leading givers, as they are inspiring role models for others.
- . To promote sharing and exchange between peers, in order to raise awareness for new donors.
- . To offer opportunities for people to become acquainted with and look into personal and collective causes.
- . To raise awareness on Brazil's social and environmental challenges.
- . To train advisors to support strategic family social philanthropy.

Guideline # 2

Promote Engaging Narratives

Summary

Fostering a culture of giving calls for a more engaging, positive, qualified and inclusive narrative capable of catering to a greater diversity of people. A narratives that people can relate to, which triggers empathy for the causes, promotes trust in the changemaking power of giving, transforming paradigms. The new narratives of giving will be understood as an act of citizenship and for the strengthening of democracy.

Key Players

- . Civil society organizations
- . The media
- . Social investors
- . Businesses
- . Communication agencies
- . Influencers/trendsetters.

Giving must be part of everyday conversation.

Guideline #2

We recommend to all of those interested in this guideline, that they contribute:

- . To focus on narrative that speaks to a broader and more diverse group of people, so as to engage more than the “early adopters”.
 - . To explain and value the role played by civil society organizations in social and environmental development, as well as in the strengthening of Brazil’s democracy, tied to the direct or indirect effects in the reality of potential donors, to bring them closer to the initiatives.
 - . To ensure transparency on the allocation of donated funds.
 - . To include more opportunities for giving in people’s everyday life.
 - . To focus on positive communication: inform and connect people with shared values, opportunities, positive views on the desired future, instead of focusing on problems.
- . To adjust the narrative according to the different targets. A certain type of narrative may engage a given group of people, but disengage others.
 - . To share more stories on giving, with the donator as the leading actor and including testimonials. Making sure donators have a voice and visibility may be a powerful engagement tool. Find people who are willing to share their personal experience of giving and what it meant to them, to trigger empathy.
- . To produce and promote research data demonstrating the impact of civil society organizations.
 - . To connect people to causes.
 - . To raise awareness through storytelling. Causes and organizations must be part of the narrative, it is important to focus on the person behind the action in any the center of the narrative.
 - . To connect donations to generally discussed and pressing social and environmental issues in Brazil (e.g., social inequality).
 - . To connect civil society organizations to symbols of trust in society.
 - . To encourage people to give.
 - . To prove the changemaking power of giving through stories of people supported by such acts, giving visibility to how the donated funds was used.
 - . To provide information on how to give, including tutorials and campaigns in accessible language.

Guideline #3

Foster a Favorable Environment for Giving

Summary

Giving must not only be encouraged, but also made easy. It is necessary to overcome tax barriers, simplify the system for the use of tax incentives² and promote access to bank services for donations. Investments in new technologies to bridge the gap between donors and receivers are key, also fostering transparency, good practices and quality information on the social impact caused.

Key Players

- . State governments/state treasuries
- . Advocacy group of the legal framework for the non-profit sector
- . Associations and networks of the civil society organizations
- . Infrastructure organizations operating in the philanthropic field
- . National Congress
- . The Central Bank of Brazil
- . The financial system and FEBRABAN
- . Donation processing companies
- . Accountants
- . Brazilian Tax Revenue Service
- . ENCCLA

² Tax incentives in Brazil are an opportunity for individuals and companies to determine the destination of tax revenues and, therefore, are technically not considered donations. Nevertheless, such revenue is essential to the non-profit sector in Brazil and are therefore included in the guidelines.

Guideline #3

We recommend to all of those interested in this guideline, that they contribute to:

- . To exempt taxes on charity donations.
 - . To foster transparency in the non-profit sector, organizing independent information platforms containing reliable data on the field.
 - . To facilitate processes for the use the existing tax incentives.
 - . To promote access of banking services to civil society organizations.
- . To simplify processes for civil society organizations to exercise their right to tax exemptions or immunity, to ensure such status is long-term or for undefined period.
 - . To foster new options for donations and new legal models that reflect the need for such innovation.
- . To promote the connection between social control mechanisms, new technologies and communications media, ensuring information reliability and access by a wide variety of donors.
 - . To encourage civil society organizations to publish financial statements, bylaws and reports on their activities.
 - . To organize awareness campaigns on the available tax incentives.
 - . To inform the public about the existence of external inspection mechanisms and agencies that oversee the reputability of civil society organizations (such as the Prosecution Office, external audits, etc.).
 - . To engage civil society in the promotion of good practices and the protection of the integrity and relevance of the non-profit sector, vis-à-vis actions and perspectives on the criminalization of civil society organizations.

Guideline # 4

Strengthen Civil Society Organizations

Summary

Brazilian's civil society organizations need to be supported in their institutional development processes. The non-profit sector needs qualified and well-paid compensated professionals, capable of implementing systemic change programs and to promote their causes and results in a clear and engaging manner.

Strong civil society organizations, in terms of their management, governance and transparency, positively portrayed by the media and respected by their donors, bring about a virtuous cycle of increased trust from the public, more funds available for the organization and an increased capacity for social transformation.

Key Players

- . Social investors
- . Board members and executive leaders of the civil society organizations
- . Universities
- . Advisors in the non-profit sector,
- . Players fostering and promoting the ecosystem of giving
- . International cooperation organizations

We need a strong, diverse and financially sustainable civil society.

Guideline # 4

We recommend to all of those interested in this guideline, that they contribute:

- . To set aside 10% to 20% of the funds allocated to civil society organizations for them to freely invest in their institutional development.
 - . To finance and promote the production and dissemination of knowledge on management and governance in the non-profit sector, including qualified data on the profile and contribution of civil society organizations in Brazil.
 - . To invest in organizational development projects for civil society organizations, to pursue their institutional growth and increased impact.
 - . To participate in collaborative philanthropy initiatives with fund-raising frameworks that allow for donations coming from different sources to contribute towards a single agenda.
 - . To stimulate the training and entry of young professionals in the non-profit sector, including subjects and content of this field in university curricula.
- . To adopt participatory grantmaking strategies, in order to democratize access to available resources, enabling civil society organizations of different profiles to benefit from such donations.
 - . To strengthen endowment funds as one of the key instruments in this agenda.
 - . To create fundraising areas within organizations, with trained professionals, action plans and goals, allocating 5% to 10% of the budget for such area.
 - . To publicly commit non-profit organizations to high standards of management, ethics, transparency and governance highlighting them as key elements to enhance the ability to fundraise.
- . To contribute at least 50% of the resources allocated to final actions in grantmaking strategies (as opposed to directly operate the programs).
 - . To allocate resources in the assessment of supported initiatives, implementing the assessment process together with the supported organization and as an institutional development strategy for the developing of an internal culture of evaluating processes and results.
 - . To develop an internal culture of impact assessment in civil society organizations.
 - . To encourage civil society organizations to share any knowledge produced/acquired with other organizations (especially directed to large-sized organizations).
 - . To organize research groups on civil society.

Guideline #5

Strengthen the Ecosystem that Promotes the Culture of Giving

Summary

The ecosystem that promotes of the culture of giving and philanthropy in Brazil needs to act in a more integrated and strategic way, with a systemic perspective, leading guidelines and a common agenda where initiatives are empowered without overlapping. It is desirable to expand the diversity of players to account for national plurality and to foster new spaces to promote the culture of giving, beyond the non-profit sector. It is necessary to raise awareness of social investors on the importance of funding actions and intermediary actors that support the strengthening of the field.

ATORES-CHAVE

- . Social investors
- . Board members and executive leaders of the civil society organizations
- . Universities
- . Advisors in the voluntary sector
- . Public administration
- . International cooperation
- . Donation intermediaries

We need to recognize ourselves as an ecosystem and start working on an articulate and strategic way.

Guideline #5

We recommend to all of those interested in this guideline, that they contribute:

- . To develop research and data on the impact of the ecosystem of the culture of giving, including any intermediaries.
- . To make a permanent effort to increase ecosystem diversity, acknowledging and encouraging the engagement of people from different social movements, such as the black and LGBTIA+ movements, from different Brazilian regions, with different perspectives, making sure diversity is part of all conversations or decision-making processes.
- . To invest – especially funds – in initiatives focused on promoting the culture of giving in Brazil.
- . To support greater connection and joint efforts by institutes, foundations, companies and civil society organizations towards existing social impact initiatives, both within and outside their networks.
- . To participate in actions that mobilize the ecosystem to promote the agenda of the culture of giving.

07. About the Movement for a Culture of Giving

Giving is believing that change is possible and setting oneself in motion to build a better country for all Brazilians – leaving no one behind.

Movement for a Culture of Giving was born to inspire and mobilize people and organizations to further ground the culture of giving as part of our culture. We believe that we have to work together for our country to fully explore its potential, cultivating donation and the engagement of the entire society, with causes and projects for positive social and environmental change.

Established in 2012 as a broad network comprised of individuals and organizations who came together on a voluntary, informal and organic basis, the Movement for a Culture of Giving helps plant the seeds and grow new ideas to promote the culture of giving in Brazil.

We are an open, horizontal, democratic network comprised of organizations and citizens interested in the cause of giving.

About the Movement for a Culture of Giving

Successful initiatives, such as the Dia de Doar (#GivingTuesday Brasil), organized since 2013, and the BIS Fund, which gives to solutions to expand the culture of giving in Brazil, are among the seeds that have been planted and grown by the Movement. In order to institutionally strengthen such efforts and support the development of our ecosystem, we have recently established a Task Force, which is a strategic and collective call to action to promote the culture of giving in Brazil, aligned by the strategic agenda formalized in these Guidelines for 2020-2025.

In so doing, we hope to bring in new players to invest in and work for our cause, as well as to provide guidance for current players and foster new joint efforts in the field.

08. About the Task Force

There are so many qualified people and initiatives working together and engaged in this field! How can we further benefit from the Movement's potential to promote the culture of giving in Brazil?

08. About the Task Force

Driven by this question and encouraged by GIFE and WINGS, in October 2019, the Movement for a Culture of Giving decided to organize a Task Force to work on a strategic agenda for the development of the culture of giving in Brazil.

The initiative began by mapping out the field, using a form answered by twenty-seven people, members of the Movement. The survey included potential challenges, players and initiatives in the ecosystem, together with other issues that shun a light on the possibilities available for the task force itself to work on, and for the Movement as a whole.

Then, in November 2019, a group of over thirty representatives of the ecosystem met at a workshop to further understand the field's strategic challenges, organized under the five guidelines (presented in this document), and to collectively draft the recommendations for the joint efforts to promote this agenda in Brazil.

Finally, in 2020, the recommendations were submitted to the critical assessment of experts in the field and collectively prioritized by the members of the Movement for a Culture of Giving, who also indicated the reference initiatives in each front. Over 40 members of the movement participate on a second workshop (online due to Covid-19) to validate the drafted document and prepare the actions to promote such efforts.
